The point of view is from the main character Felicity. She is married but her husband is wrapped up in his career and work. She has love for Oswald, and he for her but the fire that once was, is now a little glowing ember. Can she ignite the blazing flame they once had; or will it require the help of a fireman? I enjoyed the commentary from the character Felicity, as if she was talking to you like a close friend. Her opinions of people and societies status or class system are funny and comical. I related to the characterization of her mother-in-law, I think we all have family members that act a particular way. The hottie fireman Patrick WOW I think we all have a fire that he needs to put out. Now this gets a bit interesting with Patrick, Oswald and Felicity. Felicity loves her husband yet yearns for a bit of something on the side. What you ask??? Well you will have to read this juicy quick read. The characters are well developed and charming.

KurzbeschreibungBeautiful Felicity is frustrated with her passionless marriage. Her inventor husband, Oswald, pays more attention to his mechanical devices than his wifes aching need. When she is rescued by the hot alpha fireman, Patrick, she doesnt even like his brash and crude manner, but she cannot resist the undeniable desire burning between them. Oswald is forced to watch the younger, well endowed fireman claim and satisfy his hot wife, and discovers his how turned on he is by being a cuckold.
