EntertainingVon LavenderI already know Paula Dalys What kind of Mother are you but I have to say, I liked this book better. Even both heroines are quite alike. Roz struggles with her life as a single mother. She is deeply in debts, her ex is irresponsible and childish and does not support her with any money. Now she is about to lose her house. There comes this rich guy along and offers her money for sex. His explanations seem reasonable. First, Roz is appalled, but she needs the money so desperately, she agrees. But after some time, she realized that this rich guy, Scott, is not that rational and nice guy she thought he is. This book is a fast read. It is gripping and suspenseful. I liked the psychological suspense, how the characters develop. I only disliked Roz's sister Petra. Just, after a while, the story seems to take many unbelievable turns. Roz's life becomes more difficult with every decision she makes. Sometimes it felt like it was all too much, but at the same time I thought, this story is so absurd it could really have happened that way. It shows how every single decision you make can be your biggest mistake. And one lie leads to another. After all, I enjoyed reading it. A bit over the top with all those unbelievable things that happen to Roz, but it was a nice and entertaining read. I liked the setting in the Lake District. I visited this area some years ago and I enjoyed reading the names of those little villages and lakes and I remember being there. The ending is quite as I expected, but that's fine. I had a good time reading this book.
