could mean she'll never see her friends again. Hobby Friend Maggie is single, secure-and desperate for a baby. She thinks she's found the perfect solution- until one night of madness threatens her future, and she's forced to keep a devastating secret. Mum Friend Della has four children, and a workaholic husband. She's coping-just- until she risks confiding in the last person she should be getting close to. And Gay Friend Matt makes a life-changing decision before realising, too late, that he may have been too trusting. Flirty Friend Chris is a commitment-phobe, but is his fear of relationships steering him towards an act of selfishness that could destroy a close friend's life? Party Friend Susie, meanwhile, is in trouble- and if her friends can't save her, she could be heading for serious danger. This funny, insightful novel explores what true friendship really means and whether it's possible to remain friends forever- even when your own happiness is at risk. Flic Everett is a successful journalist. She writes for newspapers and magazines including The Daily Mail, The Express, The Guardian, Red, Company, Candis and Cosmopolitan. This is her first novel.
