LesenswertVon CustomerFr Liebhaber historischer Romane ,die in der Antike spielen, empfehlenswert. Ich finde es total gut, dass ausnahmsweise , im Gegensatz zu den meisten Verffentlichungen, Crassus positiv beschrieben wird. Ich warte schon auf den 3 . Teil

KurzbeschreibungIn the greatest, foulest city in the world, love, mayhem and betrayal have no trouble finding the slave, Alexandros. Given as a gift to the richest man in Rome, he soon discovers that intrigue and murder stalk the house of his master. Alexandros can solve the crime, but if he does, the worst punishment may prove to be his own. ***"Readers of Steven Saylor or John Maddox Roberts, accustomed to paying $25 for their latest in hardcover, can download The Bow of Heaven, as good as anything either one ever wrote, for $3 in about ten seconds. Enthusiastically recommended." - Historical Novel SocietyKurzbeschreibungIn the greatest, foulest city in the world, love, mayhem and betrayal have no trouble finding the slave, Alexandros. After a decade of trying to convince himself to think 'inside' the box (lots of them), he fled to Vermont where he attempted to regain his sanity by chopping wood and shoveling snow off his roof for 8 years. Like a fine cocktail, he was by then thoroughly chilled; what could be better after this than no sunshine for 13 years. That's right - Seattle. Since 2005 he has been taking the cure in Arizona, where his skin has darkened to a rich shade of pallid. Here it was that he finally realized, under the heading of hopefully-better-late-than-never, that he needed to return to his first love - writing. Andrew lives in Phoenix with Stephany and their daughter, Allison, crowded into close proximity by hundreds of mineral specimens they have collected while rockhounding. "They're just a bunch of rocks," says Allison. Ouch." You can find Andrew at his website and blog: www.andrewlevkoff.com.
