collection, definitely worth reading! Von Hoener, Birgit several short stories in one book, each dealing with paranormal "issues", and each one worth reading, some more than others. J.D. Robb "Possession in Death": Eve Dallas possessed by the spirit of a dead gypsy, trying to find her abducted granddaughter. As always, even with the slightly paranormal aspect, a great story and a delight to watch Eve and Roarke try to deal with the supernatural. Mary Blayney "The Other Side Of The Coin": You should never utter a wish when you're holding a strange looking coin in your hands! The story was heartwarming and absolutely hilarious. The protagonists felt genuine and are very likeable (with all their little faults and insecurities), and their dialogues during the time when they try to adjust to being in the other's body made me grin, if not chuckling out loud. Their desperate search for a solution was funny, as were the insights they got into each other's problems. Patricia Gaffney "The Dancing Ghost": To prove that her home is haunted (otherwise her evil cousin will sell it), Angie hires Henry, a spirit investigator (who used to be a newspaperman) to prove it. Both, however, are not playing with open cards. Following their struggle through this double con was amusing, but I found this the weakest story in this book. Ruth Ryan Langan "Almost Heaven": Rich couple die on their way home from their daughter's engagement party and discover that the fiance is not what he seems to be. They struggle to save their daughter, but there are limits to what they can and may do as ghosts. Heartbreaking at times, but amusing at the same time to see what they come up with to interfere in the living world. Mary Kay McComas "Never Too Late To Love": A very practical woman is faced with ghosts refusing her to wreck her ancestral home, at least not until she helps them find something they've all lost. Amusing and heartbreaking at the same time, but interesting to see the development and changes in all of them (including the good-looking neighbour who cannot see the ghosts), until everyone has found what they didn't know they were looking for. All stories well written, with likeable characters and good plots, so I found it very difficult to put this down before I read the last word in each story. Good thing they were short stories!
